VERBAL TILT MARKS TRIAL OF C. F. KING

There was a sharp exchange between Assistant District Attorney Dewey and Frankl A. Holmes, one of the witnesses, to-day during the trial of Frederick F. King in the Superior Court criminal branch.

Holmes was called to the stand after Phillips. He is now in the stock business with Phillips in the Journal Building. He said he had been in King's employ up to the assignment. He kept the correspondence and with King and Phillips met customers.

"Do you remember a conversation you had with me in my office in the presence of a stenographer?" suddenly asked Mr. Dwyer.

"No you must mean when you accused me of stealing $24,000?" demanded Holmes.

"You will please confine your replies to my questions?" said Mr. Dwyer, "and I want to say right here, Mr. Holmes, that I don't take anything back that I said to you in my office, and I did not accuse you of stealing $24,000."

Talked With Customers.

The witness said that only he, King and Phillips met the customers and talked to them. At 1:30 point Mr. Dwyer appealed to the court to instruct the witness to confine himself to the question. Judge Sennefeld said nothing and the examination went on.

Q.—You are a personal friend of King, are you not? A.—I am.

Q.—And greatly interested in this trial? A.—Oh, no.

Q.—You have enough interest in it to go on his bail for $10,000, didn't you? A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know where John F. Halsted, King's head bookkeeper is now? A.—I don't know, but understand he is in Chicago.

Q.—Can you identify his writing? A.—I cannot.

Q.—And yet you worked with him for four months? A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know where Miss Mary Brown, his assistant is? A.—No, but I think in Manchester, N. H. I saw her several weeks ago in my office.

Q.—Do you know of any cases where customers did not get the stocks for which they paid money? A.—I do not know.

Tells of Conversations.

Q.—What conversations did you have with King as to what you should say to customers who complained that they had not received the stocks they bought? A.—He told me to look up the matter.

Q.—Did you not tell me in my office before a stenographer that he told you to make some excuse? A.—Yes, pending looking the matter up.

Q.—Did you not repeat the several times? A.—I don't recall how often I was complaints, but I can't say how many.

Q.—Did you not tell me that there were so many kicks that you got sick and tired of receiving them and sent the customers to King? A.—Yes, something like that.

Q.—Did King consent you about the assignment? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did he tell you he was going away for a long time? A.—No.

The witness said he knew of $10,000 worth of the stock in question which were sold pursuant to King's orders.

Interest in Trial.

Interest in the trial was even greater to-day when the case was called before Judge Sennefeld in the second session of the Superior Criminal Court. The courtroom was crowded to the last available space while many waited out in the corridors to get any chance vacancy within.

King was an early arrival. He bowed to his counsel, smiled at the reporters, chatted audably with several of the witnesses, looked almost to be the last man in the big crowd who was on trial for his liberty as well as his white hostilities.

A. Frank Davis, who was managing editor of King's paper, the Tribune, and his advertising manager, took the stand for the commonwealth by Attorney-General Herbert Parker.

"King's advice," Davis testified, "always was to throw of the best stock exchange houses in New York and with them purchase a list of eighteen mining, industrial and railroad stocks and then prepared an advertisement which was printed and brought in a large quantity of new bond issue. Just as King and figured it. One of ten stock exchange firms was Bright, Sears & Co."

WITNESS SWEARS HE SAID "STAND BACK, I AM DIRECTING THIS AFFAIR."

FLUSHING, L. I., Dec. 16.—"Stand back! I am running this affair!"

That was what Thornton J. Hains said when an attempt was made to interfere with his brother, Captain Peter C. Hains, while the latter was shooting to death William E. Annis last August at the Bayside Yacht Club.

Just before that action of Thornton Hains, who flourished a revolver as he spoke, Mrs. William E. Annis, who stood near by, shouted:

"They are killing him!"

This testimony was brought out this afternoon at the trial of Thornton Hains for complicity in the crime. The witness was Edwin Andrews. He saw the shoot ing. This is what he said on the stand:

"I saw Captain Peter C. Hains shooting at Mr. Annis. Mr. Annis was in the stern of his boat, and the first shot drew my attention. Immediately I heard two or three other shots. Then I heard Mrs. Annis cry out, 'They are killing him!' and I jumped off the boat onto the float.

"Then Thornton Hains pointed his pistol at me and said, 'Stand back, I am running this affair.'

Called Doctor By Telephone.

"I ran to Mr. Annis. Captain Hains was still shooting. Mr. Annis fell into the water and I helped get him out on the dock.

"After I pulled him out of the water and placed him on the float I called Dr. Haughton by telephone."

The charge of Mr. White, special counsel in the prosecution, in his outline of the case, that Thornton Hains threatened to shoot Mrs. Annis when she tried to help her husband, caused a sensation in the courtroom.

It was learned this afternoon that Timing, the Swedish boatman, who saw the shooting, jumped into the water and rescued Peter Hains, is missing.

Timing was knocked the weapon from the hand of Captain Hains.

Jupror's Father Died.

There was some talk of a delay in the trial to-day owing to the death of the juror father of Alexander Jardine, the indicted Indian tutor. Justice Crane announced that there would be a recess to-morrow, but after a conference Juror decided that he would not ask that the trial be halted.

Prosecutor White's opening address was followed with tense interest by everybody in the crowded court room. During his vivid description of the tragedy the face of Thornton Hains blanched a bit, but the defendant was otherwise unmoved. In clear, ringing tones the prosecutor narrated the language of Thornton Hains in holding back the crowd at the Bayside Yacht Club pier while his brother was shooting.

"Coinciding with his revolver," said White, "each man who started to interfere and threatened him with search, if he persisted in his efforts, this defendant, while his brother emptied the contents of his gun into, and by its terrific velocity through the defenseless body of William E. Annis, addressed himself to them in this language:

"Back. Keep back, he knows who he is doing. Don't interfere, or you will get the same thing."

Moves to Dismiss Indictment.

Thornton Hains then lighted and smoked a pipe, and Captain Hains lighted and smoked a cigarette, said White, while Annis lay dying a few feet away.

Mr. White read his opening address, a decidedly unique proceeding in a big murder case and one that plainly nonplussed both court and defense. Justice Crane sat with his chin resting on his hand listening intently to the notes of the Prosecuting Attorney, while Thornton Hains nonchalant ly yawned this morning and. The request of counsel to his work as an author and the apparent effort to show animus existing between himself and Annis because the latter refused to allow Jardine to buy his stories only caused him to smile.

When White declared that after Thornton Hains and his brother in a back passage of the stage containing Mrs. Annis on the Bayside yacht prior to the tragedy, he

LODGE UPHOLDS ROOSEVELT ON BROWNSVILLE

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Expressing himself as fully convinced that members of the colored Twenty-fifth infantry did shoot up the town of Brownsville, Tex., Senator Lodge, Republican, of Massachusetts, in a speech in the Senate to-day, discussed the two pending bills to enable innocent members of the battalion to be reinstated in the army.

Of these two measures, he said the one introduced by Senator Warner, Republican, of Missouri, gives the President power to reenlist members of the companies discharged without honor, while the other, introduced by Senator Foraker, Republican, of Ohio, obliges the President to reenlist those men under certain conditions, easily fulfilled by them, whether the President thinks they ought to be reenlisted or not.

He declared that the Foraker bill was not only unconstitutional, but in principle ruinous to the discipline and management of the army. Holding that the President under his powers as the commander-in-chief of undoubted authority to discharge the men, he said:

Cannot Usurp His Power.

"Congress has no power to rescind that action. It can make a rule which will render such action impossible in the future, but it cannot undertake to deal with those particular men or usurp the power of the commander-in-chief to govern the army, subject only to the constitution and the laws. It cannot take upon itself the executive functions which have been already fulfilled and completed in the case of certain individuals. If you impair the proper authority of a commanding officer and make his subordinates and his men believe that Congress stands ready to review his action it will be impossible to have any effective command, and an army without an effective command is worse than useless. By this bill you would go far to convert your soldiers from an army to a mob, stimulated by agitators, and prized to popular meetings."

On the question of the guilt of the men, or some of them, Senator Lodge said that he was not prepared to express an opinion, which resulted in death and injury to citizens, houses damaged and lives endangered, was done by soldiers of the Twenty-fifth infantry, stationed at Fort Brown, and was supported by the decision of the Citizens' Committee of Brownsville, by that of the Penrose court-martial, and by a decisive majority of the Senate committee on military affairs, all of which took testimony in the case.

Sounds a Warning.

Discussing the idea that sympathy for criminals of all races and of all classes has become the fashion of time, after mentioning one or two recent striking examples, Senator Lodge said:

"To-day we seem almost to have reached the point where the sympathy is so strictly confined to the criminal that there is none left for the victim of the crime."

The Senator then uttered this warning:

"When society takes from the individual the power to protect himself and his own interests, it contracts to protect him by the slow and uncertain and costly process of law. It seems idle to do this duty. If it has lost the power to enforce the carriage of justice, if the criminal becomes the object of public pity and sympathy, if punishment, human nature asserts itself, the ancient individual right is again invoked, and feuds and lynching, Corsican vendettas and Kentucky mountain wars take the place of legal process, and law and order and justice are disregarded and set aside."

Senator Lodge referred to the automobiles and nights in the cities.

"We had no idea, of course, that we were living such a wild life. I don't know whose fooster is, and what measures ought be taken to get him."

BOOKKEEPER ACCUSED OF THEFT OF $8,000

That Arthur P. Foster, a bookkeeper in the employ of the butcher firm of Joshua Thorndike & Co., of Boston, embezzled from $8,000 to $10,000, spent it in the Australian resorts of this city and disappeared, was the assertion made to-day by a member of the firm.

Foster lived at No. 228 Willow avenue, Somerville. His present whereabouts are not known. He left his place of employment suddenly a week ago last Tuesday.

It was said to-day that young Foster had the automobile mania and that his bills for that pastime within the past few months ran from $150 to $200 a week. It was not unusual for him to spend $50 a night in some of the cafes in the city, although his salary was only $15 per week.

Harry Gerrish, a partner of Joshua Thorndike, when seen by a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter to-day, said:

"An examination of the books has disclosed that the money has been disappropriated in a series of sums. Last week a large check was drawn by Mr. Thorndike; but it was missed, and when Foster was seen he confessed that there was not enough money on hand to pay the check and he disappeared.

"Since then we have found out about the automobiles and nights in the cafes. We had no idea of course that he was living such a wild life. I don't know whose fooster is, and what measures ought be taken to get him."

CASHIER CONFESSES $85,000 BANK STEAL

SOMERSWORTH INSTITUTION IN HANDS OF EXAMINER; F. M. VARNEY ARRESTED.

The First National Bank of Somersworth, N. H., was closed to-day, and its cashier, Fred M. Varney, is under arrest. Irregularities in the accounts of the cashier were discovered by Bank Examiner Dean of Manchester yesterday, and upon his report to the directors he was asked to take charge of the bank's affairs.

He is now in charge of the institution at work with Cashier Varney behind closed doors.

Held in $10,000.

The shortage is reported to be $85,000. Cashier Varney was given a hearing in Concord to-day and $10,000 bail was ordered. He is now in charge of Deputy Marshal Johnson of Concord.

C. H. Wells, a director of the bank, said to-day that Cashier Varney has confessed to taking the money from the bank and had been taking the money for the past years.

Friends of Varney and acquaintances say that they are not surprised at the outcome. It was known to them, they say, that Varney had been speculating in stocks and that his returns were discouraging.

Bank Examiner Dean, after a careful examination of the bank, met with Varney, and says that the $25,000 cash surplus of the bank is exhausted. He says that the institution is entirely solvent. Some of the directors say they cannot make good the impaired capital.

Succeeded Slain Cashier.

Varney has been cashier of the bank since 1905. He succeeded Charles Sibley, who was murdered by John Kelley in connection with the robbery of which Varney recently worked in Dover, N. H., for the same bank where Cashier Abbott defaulted.

William S. Tebbetts is president of the First National Bank of Somersworth.

A director of the bank said to-day that it could not be stated at this time how great an amount had been taken by Cashier Varney. He said, however, that the condition of the bank, which is $100,000, would not be impaired.

Charges of misappropriating the funds of the bank were preferred against Varney. He is thirty-eight years old, married and has a two-year-old son. It is said that he lives modestly and has no extravagances.

Examiner Dean is reported to have said that the bank is solvent. The officers of the bank are W. S. Tibbetts, president, and the following directors: W. S. Tibbetts, C. Bates, C. H. Wells, W. S. Lapham, G. Fred Simons, Charles F. Harmon and Sidney F. Stevens.

Directors in Conference.

President Tebbetts today said that the shortage was discovered by Bank Examiner Dean. He said that Cashier Varney had admitted to him that the amount of the defalcation would reach $85,000. He would not, as yet, reveal Varney's methods of making away with the cash. Nor could Mr. Tebbetts say what the bank's future would be. The directors have asked Bank Examiner Dean to take charge of the institution for the present.

This afternoon, the directors held a closed meeting in the bank's offices. It is expected that a full public statement, according to its last statement the First National Bank, of Somersworth, had a capital of $100,000, surplus, $20,256; deposits, $220,241; bonds and discounts of $214,937, and cash and exchanges of $26,083.

SUSPEND LICENSE OF LIQUOR DEALER

The Licensing Board has suspended the liquor license of Hugh E. Scanlan, a dealer at Nos. 99 and 101 Stamford street, West End, from 2 o'clock this afternoon until next Monday. Scanlan's offense was a violation of the Sunday laws, for which he was convicted in the Municipal Court and has appealed to the Superior Court.

BEAUTIFUL GIRL HURLED TO DEATH?

NEW YORK, Dec. 16.—Miss Laura Blindsey, a beautiful young woman living at No. 150 West Twenty-eighth street, is dying in Bellevue Hospital from a fractured skull, and the police of the Tenderloin station and detectives are trying to find out how she was injured. The case, they declare, is one of the most mysterious they have worked on in some time. Miss Blindsey was found lying in an areaway at No. 258 West Thirty-eighth street. She had on neither hat nor coat. Whether she fell from a window or was thrown into the areaway after being hit with a blackjack the police are unable to say.

WHITE OUTLINES CASE AGAINST HAINS

PROSECUTOR DEMANDS EXTREME PENALTY IN OPENING ARGUMENT.

FLUSHING, L. I., Dec. 16.—Special day of August last. The proofs which the people expect to produce before you may be thus summarized:

On the western shore of Little Neck Bay, at its southern end, in this county, lies the suburban hamlet of Douglaston. Both shores are bounded by the line of the Long Island Railroad about a mile and a quarter northeast of the railroad station of Bayside, and where the waters of the bay lap the eastern shore are located the yacht and social clubhouses of the Bayside Yacht Club, composed of residents of the hamlet and surrounding neighborhood. Aside from the rifts occasioned by the natural beauty of the place and the added opportunity afforded for many sports and recreations, by the shore, the clubhouse by the hamlet of which the defendant here stands charged.

"On that August afternoon the members of the club were assembled there for the usual Saturday afternoon regatta.

Letters Showed Animosity.

On the bay end of the dock on the float were eight members. There were a couple of men, employes of the club, the defendant, his brother, and others. In the bay were boats, including that of the victim of the tragedy, making ready for the race.

Among the passengers were a party of stories of the sea, offering, and, if accepted, well filled with imagination for publication. Among the magazines in which his tales appeared was that known as Everybody.

On the executive staff of that magazine, and in charge of its advertising department, was the deceased, William E. Annis, on business in charge of that department. Thornton Haines, brother of the defendant, a resident of the city of Glasgow, Scotland, before, or possibly, letters expressing the opinion that Annis was managing the magazine and particularly to which were ascribed the declining fortunes of the magazine from this defendant, Thornton Haines.

About two months before the homicide the animus of this defendant, Thornton J. Haines, against Annis was further manifested in a letter received by the publishers of Recreation Magazine. In the morning of that Saturday in August Annis came to his office and opened the letter, which announced his retiring self, which was the cause of the letter engaged in the Saturday races. He was to have been one of the competitors, and was consulted by Mr. Harway, a fellow-clubman he went down to his boat and went for a preliminary sail.

Prosecutor White then told of the arrival of the defendant and his brother, Captain Hains, at the passenger station and said that Thornton Hains asked a boatman to drive him to the Bayside Yacht Club. The defendant then said that there was another man, and Captain Hains, his brother, who was standing on the southerly end of the station. The defendant and Captain Hains then entered the carriage and they did so, the boatman observed a revolver. The hack then drove toward the clubhouse, the railroad station stage being some distance ahead.

"We've Got Him Now."

The survey passed the stage and the defendant told the boatman to drop back behind it. The defendant said: "We've got him now. We've got him sewed and tied." The boatman to keep about one hundred feet behind the stage. The defendant told the boatman if he knew Annis. The driver said he did not. The defendant then described him if he knew where Annis lived. The boatman said that he knew.

Mr. White declared that after various conversations in the clubhouse in regard to real estate, the two boatmen turned abruptly and strolled off down the dock. Annis was pointed out to the Haines. While the conversation was in progress Annis's boat was passing her way across the face of the dock.

"Annis waved to Mrs. Annis and one and her friends waved a handkerchief in victory in the race," continued the prosecutor.

"When Annis's boat reached the float the defendant beckoned to Captain Hains and then hurried down the bridge and across the float, the Captain taking up his position facing Annis.

"The defendant stood close to Captain Hains, also facing the float."

The prosecutor then described the loss of the witnesses to the tragedy.

Cried "Annis," Then Fired.

"Mrs. Annis," said Prosecutor White, "was seated at the edge of the dock and watching Captain Hains and the defendant. As Annis's boat reached the float Captain Hains drew from the holster concealed in his left breast an automatic pistol of .45 calibre, stepped down facing Annis, raised his pistol in the direction of Mr. Annis, who had sailed with Annis, then turning the pistol toward Annis, who was standing in the stern, cried, 'Annis and then fired.

"At this instant the defendant drew a revolver from a concealed position and, still facing the people on the float, exclaimed to the crowd behind them, 'Don't interfere or I'll kill you.'

"Mrs. Annis heard Andreas, Jr., he said; 'Shot, I say, I am running this affair,' and Andreas stepped back.

"As the shooting ended, Annis, who after the first shot knew not what was coming, sprang along the side of the boat, staggered on to the float and into the bay water at the south side. As Annis fell his wife pushed forward and was confronted by the defendant, who threatened and even menaced her with the revolver, but she walked in forward and fled up the runway to the dock.

"As Annis struggled in the water and tried to swim, Captain Hains stood over him with his empty revolver.

Annis, bleeding from his wounds, was dragged from the water by Roberts and Edwin Andrews and laid on the float.

Stood Swinging His Revolver.

"Captain Hains was disarmed by the boatmen. Meanwhile this defendant still stood swinging his revolver, saying, 'The first man to make a move is a dead man.'

"Mr. Bowne, a club member, rushed to the float and demanded to know who did the shooting, and then, turning to the defendant said: 'Yes, he is here. Stand back, I say.' Then he called for a policeman for them.

"Bowne then demanded to know who did the shooting and Thornton Hains said he did it, and there would be more shooting before they started to search Captain Hains for further arms. The defendant then handed his revolver, which he stood Iswan to stand back.

Prosecutor White claimed that after the shooting Thornton Hains said as was Captain Hains.

"Later Captain Hains interviewed and said he was Captain Hains and threw his card. Bowne demanded of the defendant that he surrender his revolver. The defendant turned to Captain Hains and said: 'What do you say, Jack? I give it up? I don't want to shoot these gentlemen.'

Captain Hains replied: 'Let this is a gentleman's club. Give it up. We have no business here.'

Thornton Hains then surrendered his revolver.

"The defendant and Captain Hains then walked up the north end of the float and Thornton Hains lighted his pipe and Captain Hains lighted a cigarette, while Annis lay dying a few feet away.

"Then the arrival of the police and in the presence of Annis, the defendant declared his participation in the shooting and Captain Hains declared he shot no one who might have interfered with him. Then the police took charge and inquired who did the shooting. The defendant replied: 'Captain Hains and Hains, promptly answered: 'We are the men.' The police started to take Captain Hains over to where Annis lay for identification, but the defendant said: 'You don't have to take him over, I admit it.'

"In the Flushing jail the defendant composed a message to his father with the words: 'Annis is killed,' and when his attention was called to the fact that he had killed Annis the defendant replied: 'He is just as good as dead, for the state.'

Prosecutor White closed with the statement that upon the facts stated the State expects to establish a premeditated murder.

Common Sense And A Tablet

Do Away With Dyspepsia, Stomach Trouble and Make Meals a Pleasure.

When your stomach goes on a strike and mass meetings of indignation are held all over your body, then it is that you should sit up and take notice.

It is clearly and only a question of common sense—is this thing called Dyspepsia. Take away by abuse, over eating, excesses and high living, the things which the stomach needs and you have dyspepsia and indigestion, then other maladies follow these—this is common sense.

The stomach is willing enough, but you won't let it do its work. You take away the materials which are so necessary for it to use.

Give back these materials and dyspepsia and indigestion flee and the whole machinery of man begins slowly to move and do its work.

What the stomach needs is nerve force, fluids for its digestive glands, nourishment and power. All these necessities it takes from the blood. If dyspepsia gives nothing to the blood the blood gives nothing to the stomach.

This is common sense, also, pure, simple and unalloyed.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are common sense pressed by high power into tablets. In these tablets are powerful essences which go into the stomach digest food, stop gas making, prevent decaying of food, enrich the gastric juices, are absorbed by the blood and thus give it strength to furnish a better fluid for digesting the next meal. Every physician knows what comprises these tablets; every druggist has the same knowledge also. They are natural common sense digestives which do the work for the stomach quickly and well. Every drug store carries them. 50c per package. Send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail Free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

ordered the driver to drop back. Haines swung to the captain. "We've got him now." Thornton Haines smiled broadly and answered to his and Captain Hains. "That's certainly news."

White concluded his summary of the people's case at 11:30.

Dr. Hubbard was the first one on his feet. "In the light of the opening of case," he began, "I move that the first and second counts in the indictment, charging Thornton J. Haines with murder in the first degree and killing be stricken out."

Justice Crane ruled Justice Crane, "I will rule against you temporarily and you may take exception."

Then the ruling was made on a motion to dismiss the entire indictment, and G. G. Skinner was called as the first witness. He is a surveyor, and identified the plans of the Bayside Club, which were admitted in evidence.

That Thornton Haines prevented any one from interfering while his brother, Captain Hains, shot Mr. Hicks, was the claim that was the assertion of Mr. White. This fact and others that would go to show the

STATE'S WITNESSES DESCRIBE TRAGEDY

G. G. Skinner, a surveyor, was called as the first witness for the State in the trial of Thornton J. Haines for complicity in the death of William E. Annis. He identified the plans of the Bayside Club, which were admitted in evidence.

Skinner made the topographical survey in October and said he had been at the Bayside Club house "within a month" of August 15, but could not fix the exact date. He could not swear to the precise conditions on August 15, and the defense objected to the introduction of the plans. This was overruled and exception noted. After which the plans were admitted.

Edward Andrews, Jr., of Flushing, an eye-witness of the shooting, was called. He has been a member of the Bayside Yacht Club since its organization and he described the plans drawn by the preceding witness.

McIntyre demanded if it was not a fact that a fence at the club had been changed since the killing. When asked he did not know. Fifteen minutes were devoted to endeavoring to find out if the club's float rises and falls with the tide. McIntyre insisting this was said to be not clear, but the witness could not state definitely.

The question in a dozen different guises was repeated to the witness and in not the same answer. Witness was then excused. He he recalled later, and Herbert Funke, also a club member, was called.

He has been a member of the Bayside Club for several years and was questioned about the alleged changes in the clubhouse, float and surroundings since the shooting. He did not know of any changes "to the best of his knowledge."

Makes Mysterious Answer.

"Are you prepared to swear to this?" demanded McIntyre.

"No sir."

McIntyre dropped into his seat and Justice Crane, leaning over his desk, asked: "What changes do you refer to, Mr. McIntyre?"

"I would prefer not to say at this time, your honor," was the superfluous reply, and Funke was excused.

Fred G. Lewis, chairman of the Bayside Committee of the Bayside Club, was called. He also said that he did not know of any changes but could not positively answer to this.

"You had a fence built at the club house after the shooting did you not?"

"No, sir, it was put there before August 15."

Q.—You swear to this? A.—I do.

Q.—When was the toolhouse taken off the house float? A.—It was never taken off.

Q.—You are sure of this? A.—So far as I know, it is still there.

The diagrams and drawings submitted by the surveyor were all identified by the witness and admitted in evidence over the protest of the defense.

Edward Andrews, Jr., was called, and said he was about the clubhouse all day on August 15.

Q.—Did you see the defendant, T. J. Haines, that afternoon? A.—Yes.

Q.—When? A.—At 2:30 o'clock.

Q.—Was there anyone with him? A.—I don't know.

Q.—Where was he? A.—On the float near the centre.

"Swung a Revolver at Me."

Q.—What attracted your attention to him? A.—As I was coming in with my boat the float he swung a revolver at me and ordered me to get back. But before that I heard a shot and saw Captain Hains shooting.

Q.—Did you see W. E. Annis before that time? A.—Yes, in his boat by the dock.

Q.—Where was Captain Hains at the time? A.—He was kneeling down, standing while T. J. Haines was holding off the people from the float with his revolver.

Justice Crane here broke in on the examination to demand that the district attorney take the diagram and show the position.

While this was going on the justice received word of the death of Junor Jardine's father. He read the message, and made no attempt to notify the afflicted one, but handed it to the district attorney to continue.

Q.—Tell us what you saw Captain Peter Hains doing. A.—He was shooting at Annis.

Q.—How did you notice this? A.—The first shot attracted my attention. I looked around and saw Hains shooting Mr. Annis. I saw how the boat passed Mrs. Annis by cry out, "They are killing him." I immediately jumped off the boat and started toward Captain Hains. As I did so Thornton Hains turned his gun on me declaring I'll go back. I'm running this." I stood still some seconds and when the firing ceased I started toward the float and called Mr. Annis out of the water.

Q.—What was Mr. Annis's condition? A.—He was perforated with bullets.

Q.—Was a doctor there? A.—No, I got Mr. Annis out of the water and then telephoned for a doctor.

"You're Not an American."

Q.—Did you see this defendant and Captain Hains after this? A.—Thornton Haines was talking with some one smoking a pipe, and his brother was smoking a cigarette.

Q.—Did you hear any conversation at this time? A.—I did.

Q.—What was it? A.—Mr. Stevens, a member of the club, standing by Thornton Haines, was arguing with him. Hains said to him: "You're evidently not an American."

Q.—When did Mr. Stevens say? A.—He said: "We don't do such things in this country. We fight it out with our fists."

Witness explained that it was through this statement that T. J. Haines made the remark about American hero-worship referred to. This ended the direct examination, and recess was ordered, Justice Crane asking counsel to see him in his chambers.

CAPT. HAINS IS SURE HIS BROTHER WILL BE FREED

FLUSHING, Dec. 16.—Captain Peter C. Hains, prisoner at the Long Island City Prison, is confident that his brother, Thornton J. Hains, will be acquitted. He told his brother so in the Queens County Jail this morning, as the Queens County Jail officials were hard pressed together. Former District Attorney John F. McIntyre, chief counsel for T. J. Haines and Mother Haines, the brother of the accused men, were also present.

Captain Hains conversed earnestly with his brother Thornton, prior to the time of the trial. They took his brother to the Queens County Jail in Long Island City, and Captain Hains said as he left that he has been the case since the Hains brothers were arrested. Before leaving Thornton Hains was the dominant person in the building. Captain Hains left him, saying: "Good by,

CURLEY IN RACE FOR CHAIRMAN OF ALDERMEN

With five Democratic members of the next Board of Aldermen pledged to his candidacy, Alderman James M. Curley today announced that he was in the contest for the presiding officer's chair to the finish.

Curley's supporters claim that he has received pledges of support from Aldermen Coyle, Giblin and Whelton and Aldermen Trinity and Donnelly, which, with his own vote, will make him. They further claim that Aldermen Chas. J. Frank, Officer of South Boston, will be the only Democratic ballot.

The attitude of Aldermen-elect John J. Attridge of Ward 9 will thus have an important bearing upon the outcome of the chairmanship of the board, as was that of his predecessor, Alderman Rolling Attridge, the Dark, as a Good Government Democrat, but one who is said to lean more towards the Democrats.

On the Republican side, Aldermen W. Dudley Pelton and George P. Anderson will be candidates.

Alderman Curley, as senior member, will call the next board to order, and will preside until the election of a permanent chairman.

Smallest Vote in Years.

In the election only 60 per cent of the total vote polled. It was the smallest vote cast in a quarter of a century.

Captain John H. Trant, Democrat, defeated Former Alderman Milton A. Page, Republican, for Street Commissioner by a plurality of nearly 12,000 votes. The Democrats elected seven out of thirteen aldermen, and the Common Council will stand 46 Democrats, 28 Republicans and one Independent Leaguer.

The chief interest in the election rested upon the fight between the two big factions in the Democratic party. One is the Dunn-Dooley-Keliher clan, the other the Lomasney-Fitzgerald combine. The Dunn faction had an aldermanic slate of seven and elected three, Attridge, Donnelly and Officer. The Lomasney slate numbered five and elected four. They are Whelton, Curley, Giblin and Trinity. There will probably be a hard fight for the chairmanship of the Board of Aldermen.

Ballantyne Second on List.

Ballantyne got the biggest vote of any Republican for alderman, and this was largely due to the strong indorsement given him by Mayor Hibbard. He was only 1,800 votes behind Whelton. Brandon championed the Mayor's veto of the Northern avenue bridge, also got a 6th endorsement at the polls, the defeat of Alderman Baldwin for re-election is attributed to the bridge.

The majority for license was cut, showing that Boston felt its sympathy for the Prohibition wave which has been sweeping over the country.

Ward 9, Prescott is the Independence Leaguer elected in Ward 9 to the Common Council. He was also on the ticket as a Democratic candidate.

When the City Council organizes there will be a chairman elected by aldermen and a president by councilmen. The contest for Moulton of the Common Council did not come yesterday, but it was predicted that the Common Council by the largest majority he has ever received, will succeed in defeating the Republican and Independent candidates. He is a candidate for re-election as president of the Common Council.

MISS ROBBINS TELLS HISTORY OF WILL BABY

More precious to her by far than the gold which came with it is the sweet little baby girl she brought to Mrs. Mary E. Robbins, of No. 682 Washington street, Brookline. Both are left to her in a will made under which the donor passes. All Brookline is interested in the story.

Miss Robbins, who came from New York, is a teacher at the Simmons College at the Fenway. Two years ago while traveling in Europe she made the acquaintance of a young and recently married couple from her native country, and they continued their journey together. When they parted Miss Robbins promised that they should meet as soon as possible when all were home.

One evening, two months ago, her bell rang, and when she answered it a rosy-cheeked English woman, carefully carrying a baby wrapped in rich garments, was at the door.

"For you, miss," she said, handing the baby to Miss Robbins. "I know her father and mother died, poor things, and left her to you." With that the woman recovered from her astonishment the nurse explained.

Miss Robbins's friends had both died suddenly in London, and no relatives, and the one person on earth to whom they felt they could entrust their little girl was Miss Robbins. They decided to send the child and their fortune, a substantial sum, to Boston, feeling that both would be accepted as sacred trust. They made no mistake in judgment. Miss Robbins said she had verified the story and received the money sent for the child's support.

"For two blessed months now," she said today, "and she's just the dearest, sweetest, cutest, prettiest baby in Brookline. I'll never, never part with her. She never cries and is so good and cute I do not care to say how much money was left with the child, but it would make no difference now, even though it were far less or near it. Mrs. Mary and I are to be chums forever."

PLACE TABLET TO IRISH HERO IN CAPITOL

PROVIDENCE, Dec. 16.—In memory of Major-General John Sullivan and on the 126th anniversary of the battle of Rhode Island, the American Irish Association unveiled a bronze tablet in the State House yesterday. The tablet is over nine feet high and four feet wide, and is secured against the wall of the south entrance of the capitol. It bears the following inscription: "To Major-General John Sullivan, Commander-in-Chief of the American forces at the Battle of Rhode Island, August 29, 1778. Member of the Continental Congress, President of the New Hampshire and Judge of the Federal Court. The American Irish Historical Society, mindful of his ancestry, gratefully dedicates this tablet on the one hundred and twenty-eighth anniversary of his most distinguished service to the colony of Rhode Island." The medallion of General Sullivan in the centre is flanked by figures of a revolutionary soldier and a soldier of the republic.

The exercises opened with an address by Judge Thomas F. Lee, who briefly stated the object of the tablet, and on behalf of the American Irish Historical Society presented it to the State. Governor James H. Higgins responded. Dr. Francis J. Quinlan of New York, president of the National Association, and ex-governor Charles Warren Lippitt of Providence spoke briefly.

Colonel David C. Robinson of Elmira, N. Y., was the orator of the occasion. He extolled the virtues of Major-General Sullivan and threw a light upon the early history of Rhode Island.

WOMAN FINED AS SHOPLIFTER

A smartly gowned young woman, giving the name of Mademoiselle Gabrielle Frere, a French teacher, of Providence and Boston, and who brought a witness from Providence to testify to her high social standing in that city, was fined $100 by Judge Wentworth in Boston Municipal court to-day for shoplifting. A teacher of French of that name has a studio at No. 507 Boylston street in this city and is patronized by Back Bay society people.

She admitted having taken two silk scarfs, valued at about $10 each, from a down town department store. She was also charged with larceny of a box of one dozen pairs of silk stockings, valued at $1.85 a pair, or $22.20 for the dozen.

"I took the box of stocking inadvertently," she told the court. "I had a lot of packages and in picking them up from the counter as I stately picked up the box."

Miss Carrie Miller, the store detective, who caused the girl's arrest, testified, however, that Mlle. Frere, after taking the box, slipped it into the folds of a magazine and then concealed it under her long fur coat.

The defendant's witness from Providence, who testified to her high standing there, gave the name of Allen P. Stevens, secretary of an insurance company in that city. He said Mlle. Frere had a studio on Westminster street, Providence, that some of the best people in that city were her pupils, and that she was received in free remarkable circles.

Mlle. Frere offered no explanation as to why she did take the two scarves after she denied having taken the stockings intentionally. Judge Wentworth imposed the $100 fine. Mlle. Frere paid the fine from a big roll of bills.

RACE HORSES PERISH IN $50,000 BLAZE

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 16.—Seventy-five horses were burned to death in a fire which destroyed three large barns at the Indianapolis Stock Yards early to-day. The total loss aggregates $50,000. Eleven race horses belonging to Michael Reardon, including Helen Winter, a half sister of Allen Winter, the famous trotter, perished. About 200 other horses and mules were rescued from the barns of the Indianapolis Horse Sales Company.

TO SAVE BABES FROM 'MOTHER'

"The modern mother is her child's worst enemy, for when she relies on her maternal instinct in the care of her offspring she is leaning on a broken reed. It is to protect the infant from the very mothers and the mothers from their own inexperience that the Infant Welfare Academy has been founded. Through it we hope to answer the petitions of the hundreds of helpless children in New York who are unprovided by love and ignorance."

Mrs. Gilloon, herself a youthful but earnest leader in a new movement to save babies from the fatal effects of maternal incompetence, has enlisted the modern mother when, on June 8, 1909, New York will be the scene of the organized demonstration in behalf of the Infant Welfare Academy, which was incorporated Saturday by Supreme Court Justice Seabury.

General Answer to Letters and Complaints in re Shyster Lawyers

Nothing I have ever published in regard to grafters and the horde of sharpers who live upon the credulity of the people seemed to strike such a responsive chord as the recent notice calling attention to shyster lawyers. The response and complaints have been so great that it is impossible to acknowledge each one separately. I will therefore state that with those who have become more deeply interested we are preparing a circular to call a meeting, in the near future, of those who have been swindled, for the purpose of forming a permanent organization to secure relief.

I want especially to thank the honest lawyers for their letters and offers of assistance in "weeding out" the "shysters" and keeping them out of the State House and of "practising" in the courts of this Commonwealth.

Yours truly,
GEO. J. RAYMOND,

COMES FROM ISTHMUS TO CLAIM BRIDE

Dedham society circles are today greatly interested in the wedding of Miss Hazel Hewins of Dedham and Henry A. Kussmaul of Panama, who has come all the way from the Isthmus to claim his bride.

It is because Harry Kussmaul was such a splendid baseball pitcher and the pride of his choice is an enthusiastic devotee to the national game that the romance that led to this wedding began.

Miss Hewins is the pretty daughter of Eugene F. Hewins of the Oakdale section of Dedham. Young Kussmaul was for years a Dedham boy, and he and Hazel grew up together. They attended the same schools and the same children's parties.

Kussmaul became a crack baseball pitcher and brought many victories to the club which represented his home city. When pretty Hazel Hewins was with "the other girls" at a baseball game and Dedham's honors were in the balance, a strong arm of Kussmaul hurled the nine out of a hole, she lobbied for Harry and his sturdy young pitcher, and the childhood friendship ripened into affection.

Admiration became love, and when Kussmaul went to Panama to work on the canal he was with a full understanding that Hazel Hewins would wait for him.

Wait she did, and so tomorrow she is to become a bride. The ceremony is to be performed in the Methodist Episcopal Church of Dedham. The pastor, the Rev. William Kelly, is to officiate.

After a honeymoon spent in New York and other cities where baseball pitchers and his faithful champion, as husband and wife, will sail for Panama. In far Panama, Mr. Kussmaul's place of business there is in the Gorgona Grocery.

While pitching for the Dedham baseball team, Kussmaul's star work in the box attracted the attention of the managers of professional baseball teams. He was given a tempting offer by the Fall River team of the New England League and accepted. There he soon became the great pitcher of his team. Then he decided to go to Panama, but this may not be for long, as managers of teams in the two big leagues have long had their eyes on him and he is likely to get an offer which will bring him back to this country again.

'DOUBLE' VICTIM HAPPY AT HOME

Overwhelmed with letters and messages of congratulation, Mrs. Carrie F. Brown, pseudonym used by many of the women who was vindicated of the charges of forgery and larceny through the confession of "Double," is today one of the happiest women in Hyde Park.

Since her vindication Mrs. Brown has received over a score of letters from all over the country, and has also received a number of congratulatory messages by telegraph.

In an interview today Mrs. Brown said that she was very grateful to the BOSTON AMERICAN, as its discovery of her "double" and paved the way to her complete vindication.

"I am grateful indebted to the AMERICAN for its fairness in treating the case and for its excellent work in calling to the attention of the authorities the fact that a 'double' existed," said Mrs. Brown. "Through the AMERICAN I wish to thank all those who have written me expressing their pleasure at my vindication."

Every witness who testified against Mrs. Brown in the lower court, and before the grand jury has written Mrs. Brown, expressing their regrets at the trouble which they caused her. Among the letters which she received today was one from J. C. Hopkins, who he is the chief witness for the prosecution.

Mrs. Julia Griffen, Mrs. Brown's "double," is confined in Sherborn. She made a confession to Chief of Police Grant of Hyde Park, exonerating Mrs. Brown, but refuses to discuss the women who passed the bad check.

TECH GREETS NEW PRESIDENT

The Tech students have met the new president. Richard Cockburn Maclaurin, and they are all agreed that he is "all right." They gave him a conference greeting at the general convocation in Huntington Hall. The convocation was opened with a few well-chosen words by acting president Dugald C. Jackson, who introduced Dr. Maclaurin. Dr. Maclaurin said: "Mr. President and fellow students, I thank you for the warmth and sincerity of your welcome. I think you all feel the noise that I heard a few minutes ago. A few days ago I had the honor of hearing it for the first time what is known as the Tech yell.

"You have to take your part in the game of life and you have to take a serious part. Neglect of your duties will doom you to failure. Do not be misled by stories of men that have succeeded in the engineering professions without any training in institutions. It is possible for the ability of great power and ability.

"But all things are changing than knowledge. To not confine your attention to scientific work alone. The best way to learn tact and consideration for others is to mingle freely with others. Everyone needs social life.

VOLUNTEERS TO SELL RED CROSS STAMPS ASKED

Over 30,000,000 Red Cross stamps have been sold in the United States, and every cent of the proceeds is to be devoted to the fighting of tuberculosis.

The money realized from the sale of Red Cross Holiday stamps in Massachusetts is to be devoted to the fight on the great White Plague in this State. The money made in New York by the sale of the stamps is to be spent in the consumptive State; that made in Pennsylvania in the Keystone State, and so on. So every penny Red Cross stamp bought here is to be spent for humanity in the Bay State.

It doesn't cost much to help humanity in war against civilized man's greatest foe. Are you helping? Have you bought any of the stamps as yet? It isn't too late if you haven't.

Thousands on Letters.

Massachusetts has one million of the Red Cross Holiday stamps for sale. The Postoffice Department here reports that thousands of letters have the stamps pasted on the fold on the back.

The stamps cost but one cent each and for more than FIFTY they have been rallied here in this State already to fight consumption. Thousands more will be realized before New Year's at the rate they are being sold.

Just like the picture are the stamps only they are in red and white, the pretty Yuletide colors.

The money raised here is to be expended in the way of maintaining sanatoriums, day camps and relief measures for local victims of the disease. It has been estimated that there are 12,000 consumptives in Boston, so it can be seen that the $12,000 raised by the sale of stamps so far is but a drop in the bucket to what is really needed.

All over the State the anti-tuberculosis societies are selling all the stamps they can dispose of, for the money is to be expended in the localities where the stamps are sold.

Appeals for Volunteers.

Walter E. Krueck, agent of the Massachusetts Red Cross Society, is to-day appealing for volunteers to sell stamps in the smaller towns and cities where the work is not yet organized. His address is No. 4 Joy street, and he will be glad to mail you as many stamps as you pay for and then sell them to your friends in these towns and cities where they are not supplied.

The BOSTON AMERICAN, Nos. 80 and 82 Summer street, is selling the stamps. Many orders for from five to a thousand have been received from other places by mail or paper. All the money received is promptly turned over to the Red Cross Society. Any one can help the cause, even with one penny. Mail orders are promptly filled by the BOSTON AMERICAN.

DYING, BURNS UP FORTUNE

LONDON, Dec. 15.—After ordering his entire fortune withdrawn from the banks and bought in his bedside, a dying Moscow millionaire, named Petroff, ordered it to be set on fire, according to dispatches received here. When the money was consumed, Petroff summoned his family, showed them the ashes and declared they were to be congratulated on having escaped the evil of wealth.

Don't allow anything to interfere with your being at Faneuil Hall to-morrow night if you are interested in better transit in Boston.

LOANS BY CASHIER FORCE BANK UNDER

NAPOLEON, O., Dec. 16.—The Citizens State Bank of Napoleon has filed a deed of assignment to D. D. Donovan as the result of loans made by Cashier Groll to Judge Donnelly, president of the Ohio German Insurance Company. The failure of the institution is in a measure responsible for the closing of the bank.

ULCERS FORMED ON BOTH ANKLES

As Big as Half Dollars—Followed Attack of Varicose Veins—Would Lie in Misery Almost All Night—Cried with the Terrible Pain.

HIS CURE RESULTED FROM USING CUTICURA

"I had varicose veins and was in the hospital three weeks. After I was discharged big ulcers broke out on my ankles, as big as half dollars. The ointment which they had given me but it did not do me one bit of good. They kept getting worse instead of better and finally I could just manage to get along, and the ulcers broken out as big as a half dollar and I used to lie in misery almost all night long and would cry with the pains. They were awful, I can't describe. When I got up I would have to sit in a chair in order to change my clothes. My sister advised me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I washed my ankles with hot water and Cuticura Soap and applied the Cuticura Ointment and I had instant relief the first time I used them. Now I am very glad to say that my ulcers are all healed up and I can walk as well as anybody." (Signed) E. D. Oliver, 3436 Cedar Ave., Hampden, Baltimore, Md., Jan. 11 and 18, 1908."

FANEUIL HALL MEETING TOMORROW NIGHT ON TRANSIT PROBLEM

Speakers From All Sections of Greater City to Discuss Plans for Relief from Present Evils—Seats Are Free to All.

The monster mass meeting to be held to-morrow night at Faneuil Hall for the discussion of rapid transit in Boston has attracted such widespread attention that the old Cradle of Liberty is certain to be rocked by one of the most enthusiastic and earnest audiences that ever gathered there.

Not only will those in attendance be edified and instructed by the addresses to be made, but they will be entertained delightfully by Stone's full military band. This fine musical organization will be on hand early in the evening, and will give a concert of the best things to be found in the music line.

The officers of the improvement associations who sent out the call for the meeting have been hustling during the past few days and as a result the attendance of practically the entire membership of all such organizations in the Greater City has been assured.

Some of the Speakers at Big Meeting.

Here are only a few of the speakers who will address the meeting:

Mayor George A. Hibbard, Edward T. Hartman, secretary Massachusetts Civic League; Rev. Herbert S. Johnson, pastor Warren Avenue Baptist Church; Rev. Father Joshua P. Bodfish, former pastor Cathedral of the Holy Cross; Rabbi Charles Fleischer, pastor Temple Adath Israel; James P. Magennis, member of Boston School Committee; Frank B. Jones, representing Summer street business men; Matthew Cummings, former president of Neponset Improvement Association; Hon. Willard Howland of the Chelsea Board of Trade and formerly of the Governor's Council.

Crowding travel will be the main question to be discussed, although the entire subject of rapid transit in the city will be taken up. It is probable that resolutions of some character will be adopted, in order to provide for the building of additional subways in Boston it is necessary for new legislation, and the resolutions will probably be an expression of those assembled relative to this legislation.

The chief complaints are made by those who wish to travel eastward or westward in the city. The long way around by the North Station, the only way to cross the city at present, takes too much time and entails too great hardship in transferring and climbing stairs.

Will Plan for Immediate Reform.

Some scheme will be suggested at the meeting whereby immediate reform may be made if the Elevated railroad can be induced to make it. Many suggestions along that line have reached the BOSTON AMERICAN. Most of them contemplate a change in the running of surface cars and a more complete transfer system.

Those who are interested in Boston transportation for a personal or business reason should reach Faneuil Hall early, so as to get a good seat. Representatives of the improvement associations who are behind the movement declare that there will be a crowded house.

G. B. UPHAM, WHO PLANNED FIRST HUB TUBE, TELLS HOW PROBLEM MAY BE SOLVED.

George B. Upham, father of Boston's first subway, the man who drew the bill for consideration of the Legislature and who has been consulted on all matters looking to improvement of Boston's transit system, emphatically favors a cross-town subway as part of the plan to give Boston rapid transit. He also endorses the mass-meeting called for Thursday evening in Faneuil Hall to consider the best means of improving Boston's transit system. He says that every member of Boston's improvement and business associations should attend the meeting and that public opinion is needed to help the work of reform.

"There can be no argument about the matter," said Mr. Upham. "We have got to have improved conditions. There should be no half-hearted spirit or dallying with the question. It should be taken up now and at once. The need for improvement in our cross-town service cannot be put too strongly. I am heartily in sympathy with the aid the BOSTON AMERICAN is giving this great public need and believe it is to the interest of every branch of Boston's business and social life. There is no question but that a subway leading from the junction of the Tremont, the Cambridge and the West embankment tubes, in the vicinity of Beacon Hill, to the South Station, will have to be built. It is up to the people to get together and say what they want. There are certain powers vested in the people which can be exercised by a demonstration of public opinion. In the event of a disagreement between the Elevated Railway Company and the Transit Commission it is the business of the Railroad Commission to take up the cudgels for the people. The only way the commissioners can judge of what this public opinion is is through such meetings as the one to be held Thursday night.

"There has always been a strange apathy shown in transit matters. At the time the Tremont street subway was under discussion there was a lack of public interest that made it very difficult for the Transit Commission dealing with the Elevated Company to make the best terms. At that time there were many who considered the building of this tunnel too difficult an undertaking. It is significant that at this time we hear on many sides the same talk. There can be no doubt that a through east and west service, connecting or being part of the Cambridge tunnel, to the South Station, is the best to improve transit conditions. A subway is the best solution in many ways. This sort of a tunnel from Park street would have to be on a separate level and would cause delays. A shuttle tunnel, though slow, would be expensive.

"I consider that a tunnel to the South Station should be running simultaneously with the opening of the Cambridge tunnel. There should be no delay in the building of both.

"The direct benefits are almost too obvious to enumerate. Do you know what the building of the Cambridge tunnel means in time saved to the people who have to make this daily trip? It means a saving of twenty minutes per day per person. Figure out what that means in a life time. Time spent on a car or waiting for a car is absolutely wasted to the individual and to the community. Rapid transit is of paramount importance in the progress of a city. I am entirely in sympathy with the associations who are taking this question up and would like to see a monster meeting at Faneuil Hall, Thursday night."

HOTEL BABY PUZZLE GROWS STILL DEEPER

Baby Lamb and what shall be done for her—and with her—remains a growing problem for the infanger of the Hotel Commonwealth, on Boylston street, and several of his wagged guests, the baby interested themselves in the child. She still reigns supreme in one room, but that means the hotel. She seems to miss the care of her mother, Mrs. Jessica Lamb, who is dangerously ill with typhoid in the Massachusetts General Hospital.

The baby cried all night, keeping the nurses busy. Miss Lawler, Miss Elizabeth A. Lawler, and some of the women in the hotel, who insisted on caring for the child, awoke.

Miss Lawler has been unable to reach the child's father, it was learned, she says, who has a studio on Tremont street, while the hotel authorities refuse to let any communication reach the child's mother.

Until she was taken to the hospital Mrs. Lamb spent her days in the belief that she would easily meet her bills and that she would pay the first that she owed them $150. But that was easy compared with what they are to do for baby Dorothy.

'ALIMONY? BAH!' DECLARES BOM IN NEW ATTACK

PARIS, Dec. 16.—Count Boni de Castellane to-day announced the withdrawal of his suit for alimony from his former wife, Princess Boni de Castellane, who was Miss Anna Gould.

In the resumption of the trial of his suit for the custody of his three children, Count Boni, his counsel read a letter from the Count which closed with this paragraph:

"The new attitude of George Gould, as well as that of the Princess and the unspeakable who is now her husband, convinces me more than ever of the necessity of separating my children from people who have fallen into everything and [illegible] nothing. I therefore will now for my children only and no money for their support."

The Count's excellent address and unexpected change of front created a sensation in the courtroom, where it was generally remarked that his new tack indicated the conquest of his wife.

"To-day's renunciation of alimony renders it impossible for Boni to ask for money from his former wife in the future.

The letter was written December 12, and in addition to the paragraph quoted contained the following ISSUES:

"I have just read the arguments of Clemenceau, Judienne and Rousset (counsel against Boni) and I am indignant at De Sagan's attitude reproaching me as seeking only heavy damages and not caring for my children.

"I now renounce my request for a pension. If I had been capable of a mercenary attitude, I would have had only to accept the financial offers of the Princess and the Goulds. But I was outraged by them and rejected their offers."

SCHOOL CLOSED BY OUTBREAK OF DIPHTHERIA

Roslindale is facing an epidemic of diphtheria, and every precaution is being taken to prevent the spread of the disease which has already made its appearance in the schools and may cause the closing down of at least one school building.

At the Longfellow School nine cases have been discovered in one room and as a safety measure the room was to be closed and the pupils quarantined.

Fifty diphtheria cases reported throughout the district and the schools are being carefully watched by all the business for the first indications of sore throat and fever.

Notwithstanding all these precautions, however, diphtheria has spread quite rapidly of late, that district although the influence of the nine children out of one room and the fact with the disease is believed to be the largest number of little victims from any one room.

HANRAHAN TO HAVE MILITARY FUNERAL

William Hanrahan of Roxbury, Spanish War veteran and hero of the Boxer uprising, who died at New Jersey, will be buried with full military honors in Mount Hope Cemetery instead of resting in a pauper's grave.

H. H. Saunders, adjutant of the Massachusetts division of the Spanish War Veterans, sent a telegram to Fred Kuehler, the secretary of the New Jersey division, to have the remains of Hanrahan sent to Undertaker Field of South Boston, and they will be shipped here in a day or two.

Hanrahan, who was about thirty years old, lived on Magazine street, Roxbury, up to a few years ago, when he went to New Jersey. He served on the U. S. S. Maine which was blown up in Havana harbor, but escaped uninjured and served throughout the rest of the war with Spain.

HIGHER PAY FOR U. S. NAVY YARD MEN

The employes at the navy yard now know what their wage rate for 1909 will be, provided the recommendations of the board on ages are adopted.

In the rate suggested for next year there is only one reduction. That is for wiremen, the rate being cut from $3.60 to $3.36 a day for first-class men. This rate was raised one year from $3.28. A number of increases in the rates are suggested. The helpers' rate is to be increased. It is recommended for men in the first, third and fourth classes, and it is recommended that those in the second class be raised from $3.36 per day to $3.60.

All complaints must be heard and acted on before January 1.

DORANDO COLLAPSES AT FINISH

NEW YORK, Dec. 16—In one of the best running races ever witnessed in the history of athletics Tom Longboat, the Canadian Indian distance runner, beat Dorando Pietri in a full Marathon race at Madison Square Garden.

Dorando collapsed on the Fourth Avenue turn of the track on the sixth lap of the twenty-sixth mile. Longboat finished in the fast time of 2.45.00 2-5, doing the final lap close to fourteen seconds.

Longboat was in the lead in the third lap of the twenty-fifth mile, and held his advantage in spite of Dorando's desperate attempt to stall him off. Dorando was repeatedly showered with water, and as he finished the next half-mile he rushed into the lead, but Longboat sacrificed to pull up. Dorando then slowed up, so it looked for a moment as if he was all in. The Indian was on his heels, apparently ready to take up the pace whenever he was ready. Dorando's clothes were dripping wet as he finished 25 miles in 2h. 39m. 07 1-5s.

Then Longboat quietly forged ahead and began the last mile at a cracking pace. Dorando responded gamely and they ran close together, while the crowd went wild as the men reached the Fourth avenue turn on the fourth lap. Dorando tried to keep up, but he suddenly reeled and fell flat upon his face. He was completely exhausted. His brother coached him first and picked him up in his arms, other men ran to the little Italian's assistance and he was carried to the track side in a state of collapse.

Longboat, with renewed vigor, proceeded to sprint off alone around the track, while the crowd cheered him to unlimited ovation. He completed the full Marathon distance in a tremendous sprint his time being 2h. 43m. 5 2-5s.

BASEBALL NEWS AND NOTES

Fred Tenney was the only first baseman in the National League to lead off in the batting.

Hooper, the new Boston American player, is called the "Pacific Ty Cobb" on the coast.

Pitcher Landgren of the Cubs has already disposed of much of his baseball and is arranging to sell his farm near Mayetta.

Joe Cantillon certainly has a fondness for tall pitchers. Last season he had three pitchers all more than six feet in height.

Fred Beaucamp, brother of the Holy writer from Harvard, is another candidate that may an ideal hitting pitching point for a baseball team.

Ed Morris won 21 games and lost only one ball on the Pacific Coast in Bill Moriarty, not George, but he is brother of the Yankee third baseman.

No Ambrose Reader, third base is not the most difficult position in baseball. It's one round of easy cases each day, the duties of the umpire.

Kinzer Flick is living outdoors this Winter, getting rid of his time honored pallor. Perhaps he will return to baseball in the Spring ready for business, like Bedient.

Some Strang says he will never be known in baseball as Strangelove. He bet all his luck in getting married, so he reasoned, his original patronymic, Herman Hellenbeck.

Garry Herrmann certainly must have lost weight during the meeting. Clarke Griffith led him a merry chase that night. Griffith is training for a race for a Marathon.

Incidents at the New York meeting Hans Wagner refused with Charley Murphy for his chewing. Charley will wear one of his loudest suits and his loudest tie the tattooed man.

Those certainly must be a missing link between a Neil and a bull dogger. Jimmy Callahan of the Sox continues his retirement but at the same time threatening to take the pitcher's position from Walsh.

The Yankees are after George Moran, a Milwaukee boy, who has been playing catching in the minors for several years. The youngster is a brilliant fielder, but he is lacking with the stick.

A Westerner tries to remark that the Cubs with Joe Tinker, Evers still on the shelf, as effective as would Hamlet, Kyle Hamlet with the Prince of Denmark left out. That's rather hard on the other Cubbies.

Apparently the Sarmento deportation case against the New York Giants will not be solved by the time the season opens. Perhaps it will be by better authorities than our natural born lawyers.

Arthur Hoyt can be one of the best pitchers in baseball, who can win the games on the days he pitches, if he will only change his habits and be up to date old days of long ago. It certainly would take a game and a half to beat Walter Johnson.

For the first time in years the National League will hold a meeting in Chicago. This will take place on the 30th inst. Besides a discussion of the schedules and other matters are likely to be brought up. Ban Johnson will be there, of course, but Garry Herrmann is unable to get into the city and will not undertake the journey.

The Toledo club of the American Association has secured the services of Nap outfielder Lajoie.

Sullivan, Dunnebeck or Carrigan has plenty of confidence Arthur hopes a heap for the Red Sox this year, though, but it's hardly possible that either of them will be trained to get back to the motors even if the clubs waited on them.

Arthur Irwin, pitcher par excellence and sporting editor during the off season, is introducing the recently signed Dan Sullivan to the public in terms, genius and acts on worthiness that to many who are called by the umpire. The infielder was detected by Irwin and W. H. Wilson of Cleveland, and then signed to put them to saving big league jobs this season.

John L. Sullivan will have another exclusive article in next SUNDAY'S BOSTON AMERICAN. Don't fail to read it.

Hawkins Gets Mad.

When the amateur champion enters the pro ranks for the first time it is always an interesting event and that is the reason why Hawkins was selected to meet Ted Nelson, the second best man in the 12-pound class national champion, and there Hawkins showed that he is a real champion. He was a scrapper from the start and after the beginning round of the bout the champion featherweight to a couple of draws for the title, vainly try to put away Frankie Neil, the star Pacific Coast boy, at the Armory A. A.

Neil was a cripple at that, with a displaced cartilidge in his knee, which was strapped up with an elastic bandage, but he managed to withstand the savage attacks of the Britisher and last the limit of seven rounds, though it looked like a shoo-in route for him on several occasions.

The fans who surrounded the ringside were convinced that Driscoll has it on Moran in speed and cleverness and when they meet to settle the English feather-weight title next month in London the educated ones will have their coin staked on the wiry Driscoll.

Moran admits that he did not fight up to his standard against Neil or in another route bout, and has no excuse to offer but that he is backward in form.

Moran Lacked Finish.

Moran's lack of hitting powers was the glaring defect in his work against Neil. He had chances galore to catch the verdict decisively, but could not muster the proper steam behind his wallop to stop the fast Neil.

He did connect with a dandy smash in the fifth round and sent Neil to the mat, but down when Neil flopped on the mat for the count of five, the Westerner was fighting like a gamecock when he got on his feet again, proving that Neil's ammunition did not have a deadly effect.

There was nothing the matter with the Englishman's speed. He was far too fast for Neil, who is no speedy when it comes to lively stepping, but the pace was kept up terrifying for both boys.

The Californian was always wide open in his defense, neither Moran's thrashing nor the crouching Neil shooting straight jabs to the face, had once in close driving short arm jolts with either hand for the head and body. That they stung the Coast boy was apparent by the quick round they gave out and his readiness to toe up quickly and keep fighting showed gameness.

It was Neil continually backing, getting cornered on the ropes, where Moran proceeded to cut him up with stiff jolts that caused Harold trouble to guard.

Neil's Clever Blocking.

Had the Californian been less clever in covering up and blocking the hot pellets which were showered his way he would never have come through to the limit. Never did a little gladiator display more gameness when hitting pressed by a foe who was surely outclassing him. He was ready with a rally after each onslaught in which he managed to get in a few hard ones and caused Moran to lead a whizzing target for a left hook now and then, but when affairs looked stormiest for him he needed the steadiest kind of headwork and control to stand up under the fusillade of leads and keep from being put up, and he never seemed to tire in handing them out, but Neil was there with the coolness and earned admiration for his ring generalship.

Moran is nursing a badly damaged right hand today as a result of thumping Neil on the head. The damage was done in the fifth round, so he says, but he failed to call attention to it till after the bout. When the battle on the back of his flapper was on there was a lot to say. It may be cause of his postponing his match with Johnny Griffin at the club on next Tuesday.

While Moran showed himself to be in the top of his class by the masterly way he went about his business of dealing Neil's carriage, he was defective in more than one department. Neil's footwork was poor, and a boy with a punch like Charlie Griffin has fled to him might to make trouble for Moran.

The first four Neil went into the fray the short end of it two to one proposition did not disturb him any and he upset calculations of those who thought he would not stay the full distance.

ROUND BY ROUND STORY OF THE BATTLE

ROUND ONE.

Neil was the first to do the feeling out and forced Moran to the middle of the ring, causing the Englishman to meet a return swing. He got wise and moved to close, bowing a sharp left hook to the head with Moran following and Neil missed a right on the jaw that shook up his fellow. After reading a left to the chest Neil again, showing the openings, but Moran did not get one solid time for operations and stepped in to the body with a left hook that had Neil wincing as it sank home. Before the round ended Moran had Neil in trouble on the ropes, but the only solid punch he scored.

ROUND TWO.

Neil started to mix it, but managed his mixing with more caution than at first and left over so fast it was difficult to follow their flight. Moran began stalking him on his left and staying well away from the swing of the Californian's right. The same idea—stalking to the jaw. He drove a short right to the head while busily clinched and on the break away Neil missed a left swing, the slipping another right to the body. Neil weakened slightly under the punishment and Moran appeared to be stalling for time to meet the finish of the round, but Neil was not letting fighting chance escape. Neil on the nose without a return. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince.

ROUND THREE.

Moran opened by sliding and got away with it to easily that he posed a double southside punch on Neil's features. Neil lowered his head and rang the next one on the top. Tom Hogan was in his corner and roared, urging to rush and left to the body. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered four to one. He missed Moran to the body with a left and Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince.

ROUND FOUR.

Moran didn't waste any time waiting for Neil, but slammed right to body. The Englishman patted for the head and Neil switched to the body instead. Neil took a hard one on the jaw from Moran's right when he feinted with left. Moran appeared to be getting more interested in mixing and Neil quickly and hammered and piled in rights and lefts to the body, forcing Moran to clinch. Neil seemed to tire from the hammering and missed a right swing. Moran landed a left hook to the jaw, which staggered the Pacific boy.

ROUND FIVE.

Neil was ready with a left hook to the nose and Moran met him with the same kind. Moran forged on a right cross to the jaw and Neil ducked in time. Moran's left to the latter was inclined to be wide open, allowing Neil to step in and keep going, shaking Moran up for the first time. Neil missed a left swing for the head and Moran countered with a left to the stomach, but Moran grinned as he jerked his head back. Neil was forced to clinch to escape Moran's ear ringer with a left. Moran landed a left to the body and Neil countered with a left to the head. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince.

ROUND SIX.

Neil led to the kidneys, Moran got started and smashed on the heart with a hard right, following it up with left and right to the body. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince.

ROUND SEVEN.

Neil was quick on the leading with left to the body, while Moran fooled with the same hand to the face. Moran had to duck as Neil went at him with left hook to the head. He succeeded in getting Neil's straight lefts, starting with jabs to the face, but Neil took his punishing and dug away at body.

ROUND EIGHT.

Moran started to walk around poking his left into Neil's face to get a chance at his jaw, but Neil was there. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince.

ROUND NINE.

Moran was intent on a quick win and drove a heavy right to the brain. It hurt some and Frankie was on the defensive, getting caught with another right on the jaw before he could extricate himself. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince.

ROUND TEN.

Neil was still game, but his skill was gone. Moran sent a left hook into the body as he stepped and a second left smashed a right on the heart, and Neil fell forward and clung fashion and then came out of the clinch a bit shaky. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil made attempts to put him out and, without any caution, began punching with either hand. Moran came to him before he drew a hard left to the body that nearly brought him to his knees, and was going well in his delivery at the bell, but Neil failed to make advantage of it.

ROUND ELEVEN.

Moran was the aggressor and was in the act of forcing Neil to the ropes when the gong sounded. Neil and Sets before being tied up. Neil tried to land a right for the body and Moran blocked it with his left hand. Moran managed to slide in a body punch with either hand and Neil was pushed back by the sheer force of the attack. Neil and Moran mixed it up and Moran crowded him to find a spot to land on.

ROUND TWELVE.

Moran took a sort of a jumping-jack movement when he came out for the final round. He hopped toward Neil and ran home with right and left, and Neil was all at sea for a moment. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince. Moran missed a left swing for the head and Neil countered with a left to the body that made Moran wince.

TOMMY BURNS KIDDING THE SYDNEY NATIVES

By TAD.

"Jack Johnson boxed with a young kangaroo yesterday at his training quarters," says a Sydney exchange in starting its story of the black heavyweight's workouts for the day.

Johnson boxing kangaroos is something in the order of Bob Fitzsimmons wrestling with Miss Iola, young Corbett rumbling with his pony and Kid McCoy doing shadow boxing with his collie dog at Marlboro-on-the Hudson.

You never can tell what these fighters will do next.

The Sydney papers are simply filled these days with stories of the two heavyweights who meet there on the 26th of this month for the heavyweight championship of the world.

Johnson is there boxing with his trained kangaroos and Joe Grim. First one comes on and then the other. The big fat baby has outfitted the kangaroos with boxing gloves and manages Sam Langford, who moved over there a few months ago, to keep them away from him. The Australians reserve Sam a great deal of weight in such weather feels that he should time to the kangaroos' workouts.

Burns is doing the Kid McCoy stunt to a finish, only he is not boxing kangaroos. He thinks it is the best country in the world, and that after the fight he intends living there, and has already deposited $100 with a real estate firm for an option on a cozy little bungalow. He intends to have a great bit telling them just it is the best country in the world so far as his training is concerned around the world.

Mr. Moore and Tommy Ryan worked that old stunt threadbare. Wherever the Kid or Ryan went to fight they told the natives that they intended putting their diminutive foe right and make a good clean up, as the place was sure to be a sellout. Right after the conclusion of the fight the natives saw nothing but dust.

Burns little story doesn't hurt, however. They all fall for it. Burns is doing his roadwork with a rag Panama hat and a couple of bathing suits. The weather man satisfies him to a T, and he feels that he will be in great shape by the time of the contest. Pat O'Keefe, the great Irish comedian, is helping Burns to keep cheerful.

Sam Langford is sure making a hit with the Britons sports. Every day the Western boy and Burns have long chats over the long distance 'phone between Boston, and the chances are he will be given a 10 to 4 favorite before he enters the ring on December 26. Tommy Jeannis Walsh is out there boxing with Langford, along with nine amateur aspirants. More paint for that house, Stubbs.

Mickey McDonough came near being arrested Sunday morning about 2 o'clock. He was down at Simpson's back shop, knocking the kinks out when the boss of the joint, who sleeps above the store, stuck his head out, and, thinking him a burglar, yelled: "Say, what do you want down there? I only want to know what time it is; you have my watch," yelled Mickey. Tad cop let him go.

Here's a letter just received:

"Colma, Cal., Dec. 10.

"Dear Tad:

"A few lines to let you know that Sam Langford is located here, and is getting in shape for his coming go with the Fitzsimmons, the lightweight of Pueblo, Col., which takes place before the Washington A. C. the 23d of this month.

"Sam is creating much interest here, and in the event of his winning from Fitzsimmons, public opinion will certainly crown him and the town Puncher to hook up. As Kid Lavigne has stated that he would fight Langford if Burns fought Johnson, I suppose, being arranged for this other affair event some time ago. There will be big preliminary, a four round go between the Japs.

Langford has been here all say that Berger's card the 21st is the strongest seeing did put on here since the earthquake, and hope to drop a ringside seat at the big Coliseum. With kindest regards, I remain, sincerely yours,

"J. A. WOODMAN."

MANY THOUGHT KELLY BESTED BILLY PAPKE

BY H. M. WALKER.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 16.—Opinion seems about divided to-day as to the merits of a Referee Jim Jeffries' draw decision in the battle between Hugo Kelly and Billy Papke. Fully one-half of the 15,000 spectators at the ringside seemed to consider Kelly the better man of the two, despite the fact that he was floored in the fourth round by one of Papke's three right scissors.

The way Kelly came back after this knockdown, hammering Papke all about the ring in the fifth, and making a fierce onslaught thereafter, inclined the crowd in his favor, and a decision his way would have caused no kick.

Just as Papke had beaten the features and body of Stanley Ketchel in the seven ring last fall, so was the Kewanee man's face disfigured by the fighting Italian middleweight. Both of Papke's eyes were badly swollen, the left one almost closed. His mouth and nose were shooting blood and, taken altogether, he ex-changing presented a pitiful appearance at the finish.

He was forced to back away or hang on through sheer exhaustion.

Papke was badly handicapped by the swollen condition of his eyes, which made it more than difficult for him at times to keep back the clinches Kelly Billy's fighting style rendered it very fast all around, and in the round the other optic quickly was closed from Kelly's punches.

FIGHT BY ROUNDS.

ROUND ONE—Papke rushed and exchanged his official pass. They clinched twice in quick succession and after the second Kelly landed a right at the body with both hands and they clinched again.

Another clinch followed. Kelly got in a left, up and Papke a short right swing on the ear. Then came another clinch. They broke and began sparring. Kelly landed and Kelly staggered Papke with a right swing to the jaw. Kelly then shot Papke to the ropes and they mixed it. Kelly getting the cleaner hitting and landing the greater number of times. Papke got in a straight left and right to the face and countered him with a right. They mixed it for three or four seconds, Kelly getting the better of the mixup, getting in a body blow to Kelly's round.

Jeff Takes a Hand.

ROUND TWO—They came to a clinch in the corner. As they broke Kelly put in a right uppercut. Then there were two or three exchanges in succession, but little action between. Papke swung the right and caught Kelly on the shoulder. Kelly countered with a right on the jaw and there was free slugging all over the ropes. Kelly hitting the inner of the two. Papke missed from a clinch. Kelly swung a left on the jaw and Papke countered with a right. They sparred again and Jeff parted them. Papke held Kelly's head and left and right to the face and then again. They clinched again and Kelly got in a left to the body and Papke's head. They hung together and Papke missed the ribs with the right. Kelly's round.

ROUND THREE—Papke pressed Kelly around and they clinched. They broke away again and then broke and exchanged blows. Kelly's head was jerked back by a left hook to and shoe. Jeffries had to separate them forcibly. Papke missed a left and followed with straight left and they clinched. Kelly got in a left to the body and a right on Papke's cheek. Kelly met Papke with uppercuts and they clinched. Jeff parted the Kelly had a shade the better of the round.

Kelly Goes to the Floor.

ROUND FOUR—Papke shot in a left on the mouth. Papke covered from a rush but took a right uppercut on the chin. At other clinch, each landed with the left and Kelly got in left, right and left cross to face. Kelly sent Papke with a stiff right on the chin and Jeffries had to break them. Papke reached the body with a left and in the mix-up placed left and right uppercuts on the chin and sent Kelly to the floor. When Kelly arose Papke crowded him, uppercutting again and he was forced into a corner, but covered up. He hammered to the ribs at times and occasionally sent a stiff uppercut through against Kelly's face. Kelly kept covered until his head cleared and then fought back desperately. Each landed freely and Papke's face was bloody. Papke's round.

ROUND FIVE—Kelly landed a right and then clinched. Kelly clinched again and Papke broke him away. They mixed it and Kelly boxing cleverly now and using good effect. Papke was blocked. Jeffries followed Papke and Jeffries was kept busy separating them. They slugged fiercely inside and Kelly seemed the better man. Papke covered his face and Kelly's punches glanced off the Illinois Thunderbolt's hands. Berger shouted to Papke to exchange and for the other fighter to keep at work. Papke was on the defensive in the rest of the round. Round to Kelly.

Papke's Eyes Nearly Closed.

ROUND SIX—Papke rushed into a straight left, which farred him. They clinched and broke them. Papke was the aggressor with the right and Kelly swung the right on the neck. Papke blocked an upper cut and they clinched. Papke put in a short left on the ribs and Kelly came back with a right uppercut on the mouth. Papke got a shade the worst of a rally. They closed on him. Kelly got in a left and a lively pace. Papke's face was in a bad way from Kelly's blows. Papke's round.

ROUND SEVEN—Kelly ran around and Papke ran after him, until they came to a clinch. Kelly drew back from a right hand over and brought in right uppercuts. Papke tried the overhander and Kelly shooting for his jaw. Papke was clinched and hung on as though hurt. Jeffries kept separating them. Kelly and Papke two or three times with a right uppercut and Kelly with a left and right swings. Papke feinted and sent a snappy right uppercut to the jaw. Kelly landed twice with the right on the body and Papke sent in left and right on the face. Round even.

Papke Braces Up.

ROUND EIGHT—They went quickly into a clinch. Then a little wrestling. Papke went after Kelly, sending in left fakers and drawing away from Kelly's re-ply. Kelly missed an uppercut as they came much good service now, and clinches were frequent. Kelly landed right on the round the ring but did not land. Kelly and Papke mixed it, Papke's right hand countered him with a right. They mixed it for three or four seconds, Kelly getting the better of the mixup, getting in a body blow to Kelly's round

Marriage Doesn't Reform

Don't Try It, Girls; It Always Has Failed

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

THEY sat beside me on the ferry-boat—a young married couple in the early twenties.

The wife was a fresh-faced, comely girl, neatly dressed, and with the saddest face I have seen in many a day.

The husband was a strapping fellow of six feet or more, well built—and hopelessly intoxicated.

As we got off the boat she took his arm and guide his wavering footsteps. He looked at her with a foolish, vacant smile, and went along quietly enough until he caught sight of a saloon across the street.

He stopped and said something to his wife, who shook her head and tried gently to push him toward the station.

Instantly his face grew set and ugly. He struck off the gentle hand and started on a wavering run toward the saloon.

One Step More to Brutality.

The last I saw of them, he was disappearing through the swinging doors of the saloon, and the young wife was standing on the corner, waiting for him.

He had been almost helpless, but quite good-natured, before he went in, but the chances were that another drink would change him from mere foolishness to brutality.

As I looked at her, I thought: "Yes, poor, pretty, young thing. I wonder if you married this man to reform him?"

I would have liked to have taken a photograph of that young face and have shown it to him in his sober moments. I think the sight of his foolish, vacant face might prove an effective temperance lecture to him.

I have never yet seen a human being improved by drink, but I have seen men and women who, when sober, were normal, sane beings changed into coarse, foolish, tiresome, bad-tempered, suspicious fools.

Chance Only One in a Thousand

Don't throw away your youth and happiness in marrying a man to reform him, for it does not work in one case in a thousand.

Let the man reform first, and then marry him, if his reformation is sincere. You have no right to marry and bring children into the world, and blight their young lives with the curse of a drunken father.

If you are unfortunate enough to fall in love with a man who is addicted to drink, help him all you can with sympathy and encouragement, but don't marry him until he has conquered the appetite.

A habit of that kind does not stand still. If the man does not conquer drink, drink will conquer the man.

The young men who are getting on well and who have the right to ask a girl to marry are not given to drink. They are too ambitious to forge fetters for brain and limb.

And the you must remember, girls: If you wish to have any influence over the man you care for, as regards drinking, you must refrain from touching it yourselves. You cannot preach what you do not practice.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

HARD TO ANSWER.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

While away on my vacation last Summer I met a young man who was quite attentive to me, but as business called him a great many miles away, and he expected to be detained for three months, he begged permission to write me until he returned. The correspondence ripened for four months. I always found his letters interesting, and he wrote at great length. Up to about three weeks ago, when I received one from him that was very short, and impressed me as though it was an effort for him to write. I felt rather piqued, and did not answer to my usual lengthy, humorous way, but merely acknowledged it with a postal, to which he did not reply.

Would it be undignified of me to write him again and ask him if I offended him, should I consider the correspondence closed? ANXIOUS.

IT is hard to answer questions of this sort, for usually when a man begins to drop his side of the correspondence he is tired of it. It may not be so in your case, as he stopped so suddenly. If you have any reason to feel that he is still interested, you might write again, but I think you will find that if he is anxious to keep up the correspondence he will answer your postal.

DO NOT WAIT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

About two years ago I met a young man whom I liked very much. He asked me to keep steady company with him, as he often said we do loved me. Last spring he lost his position and I discovered that he had no money saved, although he wanted his friends to think that he was well supplied with money, but he went out West. He wrote last fall that he was getting on and obtained a position there and intended returning this Winter. He has neither written since nor returned the money I loaned him. Ought I to wait for him to return, or accept the attention of other young men? ANXIOUS.

DO not think of waiting for him. You are not bound to him in any way. If he had any proper feeling he would have returned the money long ago, and he should not have accepted it in the first place.

DON'T BE TOO EASY

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Two years ago I met a man five years my senior and learned to love him very dearly. Without the least provocation he went away after keeping steady company with me for several months. I did not hear from him at all until recently he returned and now wants to renew the old acquaintance. I still love him, but I feel hurt at his action. What would you do under similar circumstances?

S. V. K.

IF you will very much to renew the acquaintance, do so, but remember that he hurt you once, and may do so again. As you love him and he is not to be depended upon, I would advise you to treat him in a friendly way, but to keep him at a distance. Try not to grow too fond of him.

An Anonymous Girl Writer's Confession, in Which She Bares Her Inmost Soul

My Self That Loved a Man Unknown

Copyright, 1906, by American-Journal-Examiner

HIS face first flashed upon me in a crowd. I caught just a fleeting glimpse of it—a sudden leap of light from among dull sea of faces.

Three things impressed me—the gray luminous eyes, deep set and searching, the clean cut of the features; the square chin with a cleft in it.

I saw this in a swift second of time. But more than all else was the look of mystery, of sweetness, of romance that shone about that face like a halo.

"There!" I cried within myself, with a sudden gasp. "There is the sort of man we find in books and plays and never meet in actual life. There's an ideal!"

It was three months later that I sat in a crowded suburban train, amusing myself by studying the backs of people's heads. I always find huge diversion in this, especially in studying men's heads and the hair of their necks. A woman's head and neck are usually swamped with millinery.

I used to think all men's heads looked very much alike, disfigured as they are by hideous derbies pulled down over them. But careful observation showed me an infinite variety of masculine heads and necks and ears.

A Head Eloquent of Charm

To-day I was attracted by one particular head. It was positively eloquent with charm. The hair was dark, with just a tinge of gray, clean, glossy, and not too closely shaven. The back of the neck had a good, lovable, bevish look, the kind of look that makes you want to drop a kiss in the hollow of it.

Just as I noticed that the head turned. My heart stood still for a moment, checking my breath. Then the blood danced and flooded in my veins. It was the face of my ideal, unknown man!

But I saw only the profile, and that just for an instant. At the next station he arose to leave the car. I saw him as he turn his face again as I would see it. He stood with his back toward me all the while.

It seemed to me I had never before observed such eloquence of expression in a man's back. A broad back, with a long swing of his overcoat, and the way it hung from his shoulders. And the rounding of those shoulders and the nodding, thoughtful look in the forward bend of his head.

Then the train stopped, and he disappeared from me again.

It was not two weeks later that I met face to face with him in the apartment building directly opposite the one where I lived. I had been to call on some acquaintance, and was just leaving the elevator when I looked up to find him standing ready to enter.

"There!" I cried within myself, with a sudden gasp. "There is the sort of man we find in books and plays and never meet in actual life. There's an ideal!"

It was three months later that I sat in a crowded suburban train, amusing myself by studying the backs of people's heads. I always find huge diversion in this, especially in studying men's heads and the hair of their necks. A woman's head and neck are usually swamped with millinery.

I used to think all men's heads looked very much alike, disfigured as they are by hideous derbies pulled down over them. But careful observation showed me an infinite variety of masculine heads and necks and ears.

A Head Eloquent of Charm

To-day I was attracted by one particular head. It was positively eloquent with charm. The hair was dark, with just a tinge of gray, clean, glossy, and not too closely shaven. The back of the neck had a good, lovable, bevish look, the kind of look that makes you want to drop a kiss in the hollow of it.

Just as I noticed that the head turned. My heart stood still for a moment, checking my breath. Then the blood danced and flooded in my veins. It was the face of my ideal, unknown man!

But I saw only the profile, and that just for an instant. At the next station he arose to leave the car. I saw him as he turn his face again as I would see it. He stood with his back toward me all the while.

It seemed to me I had never before observed such eloquence of expression in a man's back. A broad back, with a long swing of his overcoat, and the way it hung from his shoulders. And the rounding of those shoulders and the nodding, thoughtful look in the forward bend of his head.

Then the train stopped, and he disappeared from me again.

It was not two weeks later that I met face to face with him in the apartment building directly opposite the one where I lived. I had been to call on some acquaintance, and was just leaving the elevator when I looked up to find him standing ready to enter.

A Dagger of Joy in Her Heart

The unexpected sight of him was like a dagger of joy thrust through me. For a sudden, blinding warmth and beauty seemed to blaze up and envelop me in a sheet of flame.

I walked out of the building marvelling, my breath coming in gasps, at the thought that he was here—here in my very neighborhood! Why, I might have lived in this vicinity. Could it be that he lived in that building, directly opposite me?

"I wonder, I wonder?"

My brain thrilled and expanded with the question; my heart leaped with the hope of it. But all the while I said to myself "it can't be—it can't be. Surely I would have seen him many times before in this very street, if he lived here. It's out of the question that he should have lived so near me and I should never have known it till now."

Nevertheless, a keen, sweet eagerness urged me toward the window the moment I reached my room. I felt a rushing tide of expectation, delicious, wonderful. My heart beats hurt me, they were so swift and strong.

Strange I had never before found time to observe the people in the windows across the way? As I searched these without success in the dusk of the late Winter afternoon, I marvelled at my former stupidity, my indifference. A whole new world of interest was suddenly revealed.

Saw His Dear, Wonderful Face

The window directly opposite mine was dark, but while I still gazed at it some one came in and touched a match. I could see the thin flame sputter and go out. Another match was lighted. Then in a moment a soft illumination glowed from the shaded lamp in the centre of the room.

I saw the lamp plainly. I saw the table with its book and magazines upon it. Then I saw—while my senses swam in a blaze of gold—I saw the face, the dear, wonderful face of that unknown man!

Breathlessly I watched there, drinking up the vision. I felt all the marvellous thrill, the thrilling suspense of one who sits in a theatre watching a tense climax, while the shivering music of the violins creeps across her heart.

It was real, but I saw him as distinctly as I had seen him but a few moments ago, at the elevator. The lamp light shone mellow and clear upon every feature. It was he.

I saw him throw aside his overcoat, draw up a chair and seat himself beside the table. He thrust back, easily and graceful, his fingers through his hair, shaking his head and shoulders as if he wished to shake the worries of the day from him and give himself utterly to relaxation.

After a while he took out a cigar, and lighted it lazily, still the deep-set eyes.

He smoked dreamily, abandoning himself completely to the charm of smoke wreaths curling like wraiths of beauty toward the ceiling. After awhile he opened a book and read.

Then I saw an old woman in a cap and apron enter the frame of the picture. She seemed a housekeeper or servant. A moment later the shade was drawn, cutting off the vision.

He Actually Spoke to Her

I could hardly wait for dinner to end, that I might return to my post. My pulses leaped as I pressed to my window again and saw the light still glowing in the opposite one. This time there was no one in the room. But I waited. I waited and watched.

At last his figure rose out of the shadows. He took a book and pencil and paper and seated himself at a drawer. Then he began to write—to write rapidly for hours. I saw him arise and pace the floor for several moments, his hands plunged deep into his pockets. Then he sat forward in that intense, concentrated way that I knew so well, and began writing off the picture.

Time after time, week later the most wonderful thing of all happened. I went out on the street one day and saw him coming toward me. I saw a man ahead of me, just lifting the hat. He did not see him. He could have seen him many times before in this very street, if he lived here. It's out of the question that he should have lived so near me and I should never have known it till now."

Nevertheless, a keen, sweet eagerness

Later I could leave it with the elevator man in his building, I reflected.

Symbol of a Kindred Soul

Meanwhile I walked on air, with that wonderful knowledge in me. His name—his address! Only a moment ago it was in his possession; now it was in mine. The thought was intoxicating to me. It seemed a very part of him, that volume I held so jealously in my hand.

Up in my room again, I devoured the title page. Then I cried out in exultation: "I know it. I knew it before I looked. I love. Oh, it's like him; it's like him!"

It was Masterlinck's "Treasure of the Humble" and he had thickly marked the very passages that I have marked in my own volume. In the chapter on women he had marked this:

"When Fate sends forth the woman it has chosen us—she warns us at the first glance."

Oh, I knew that passage by heart! And I kissed the book—his dear book—over and over, and hugged it to me. And I looked across the way and saw him in the golden glow of light, my heart yearned toward him.

"You dear, you dear!" I whispered, in the dark.

Then at the last time I saw him. Two days later, when I went to return the book, I was told he had gone away. And I thought of it. I knew all. I knew he loved me, and I could never see him again.

And Besides, Think of the Saving in Wear on Hatpins

He Knew the Symptoms

I WONDERED when I saw Liem next
What made each woman's smile so sweet.

It was so radiant and bright
And so expressive of delight.

I saw them hasten to embrace,
With rapture written on each face

With arms outstretched, they quickly ran,
And kissed as only women can.

They broke away at last and then
They stood and thought and kissed again.

Each said, "You darling!" and "You pet!"
Each did when each the other met

"How well you're looking, dear! It's strange
To me you never seem to change."

"And precious one, how well you seem!
That hat you have's a perfect dream."

They looked each other up and down,
And, "What a simply lovely gown!"

"I wanted so to see you, dear!
How long it's been! Almost a year!"

"I've thought of you so often, too,
But, oh, I've had so much to do!"

They gushed and gurgled to that say
For twenty minutes, I should say.

I thought, "Well, I should like to know
What makes them hate each other so."

By a Woman Hater

ALL men are equal—as long as they remain in the bachelor class.

A girl always has a good time at a party if she has on a new dress.

A splendid way to get engaged to a young widow is by trying to avoid her.

The young widow begins to talk about her late husband early in life.

A woman's eyes never grow too dim to detect the point on another woman's face.

You can't tell much about a man by the things that appeal to her sense of humor.

A woman can get even with a man by marrying him and then refusing to kiss him.

Somehow a girl seldom thinks it worth her while to trust a trustworthy young man.

Speech is silver, silence is golden, giggling is bronze and laughter is apt to be ironical.

In accord with the law of the eternal fitness of things, I've must have lauded Adam's great persimmon.

And a woman's idea of a pretty hat is one that costs a lot of money, regardless of what it looks like.

Somehow it is awfully hard for a mother to persuade her daughter to marry the kind of man who will make her happy.

Swelled head is a disease from which the recovery is more painful than the disease itself.

AS the itinerant oil merchant made his way along the road, he met two customers, one bearing a three-quart can and the other toting a five-quart measure. Each demanded an exact quart of the precious fluid.

Honest John had only his trusty three-quart can, but before quick action was promptly filled his measure and supplied the customers of all through the morning of the three receptacles until he had exactly a quart in each of his customers' cans, and had returned the remaining seven quarts to the tank.

An Aid to Popularity

He Tries Telling the Truth With Disastrous Results

By KENNETT HARRIS

"HEBREAKER went over to see Law-yer Harvey last week an' he took out papers an' Don served you on Perry. He's goin' to claim $500 damages." Dave Jones imparted this information to the little circle gathered about the stove in the country store.

"What for?" asked Marvin Parsons. "Defermation o' character, o' course," said the storekeeper. "Slander an' scandal an' mental anguish. He's goin' to sue, too."

"He's got to," Perry said, hotly. "He's a liar!"

"That don't cut no figger," said Winchington Hancock. "The time it is the best way o'nanner there is to winnin' the suit for him hadn't got nothin' to do with the truth. The laws says you've got to keep your mouth shut about a feller's character unless you're talkin' about him."

"That's the reason that we've got our slanderin's, an' if the truth was told almost all there wouldn't be nothin' but preachers o' the peace from spring plantin' to hawg killin'."

Truth Ground for Damages

"Spose I went around sayin' that Sol couldn't make a decent livin' if he went to a dawg fight or that Rufe gave short weight an' put one-third water to every quart o' cider 'cause that he sells, not to mention sayin' damaged gun goods an' workin' 'em off on folks who was far behind on their bills to lock, or that you traded a limpy lawed cow to the preacher an' let on you didn't know what limpy law was. Then all you fellers 'ud have grounds to sue damages. Bein' true wouldn't make no difference."

"Spose I went around an' said that you was the biggest liar that ever stepped?" suggested Parsons.

"I wouldn't keer unless I got to hear about it," replied Hancock. "If I did hear it I wouldn't keer, either. Nobody'd believe you. Anyhow, I couldn't collect dam ages."

"Why couldn't you?" asked Parsons.

"Becuz—oh, I reckon I'd better not say. Bill Phaney says he'd like to c'lect that feelin' he made with you. I 'low that you ought to have made you put up the money when he made the bet, too."

"What's the use o' makin' trouble by tellin' the truth?" continued Hancock. "Jest like the time Jake Hanbery started out to make himself popular. Jake was one of these fellers that allus agreed with everybody. He was kinder somewhere himself an' he allowed everybody else was the same way. He went around with a heerful, watchin' out that he didn't step on no one's corns, that he never got nowhere.

Too Anxious to Have Friends

"He wanted to be friends with everybody an' he tried so hard that he hadn't a friend on earth. Finly he got so there was tears standin' in his eyes 'most all the time, he felt so bad about it. One day he was talkin' to a cousin o' mine, an' he was goin' on about how he was the reason nobody seemed to cotton to him.

"You're too milk-an'-water with folks," says my cousin. "You're too afraid o' hurtin' their feelin's. You're got a good word for everybody, no matter how you mean an' ornery he is. I heard you praisin' up one Sam Bates the other day."

"'Oh Sam's a right nice ole man,' says Jake. 'He won't drink nor swear nor chew terbacker an' he's bred some almighty fine stock.'

"There you go," says my cousin. 'He'd ruin his reputation for truth an' veracity to build him up, besides internal injuries to his character. One family down to a never take that kind o' talk 'bout a neighbor."

Tried the Truth Just Once

"'You you think so?' asks Jake, mighty anxious.

"'I know it's so,' says my cousin, in his cock-sure way.

"'Why don't you do it then?' says Jake, all of a sudden. 'I hadn't never heard you lambaste anybody not to their face, an' I'll bet you can't do it. I hadn't sound better than any one else—I never heard you say a word—but you talk that you think you're the only decent critter in the town, an' I'll bet a dollar you that I've heard more orneriness about you than you ever heard about me. Mrs. Bates, an' Todd Walker's wife wouldn't have no truck with you.'

"It's my opinion Bill Turgeon is a liar, but I'll bet you a dollar you was dogged if you stand in with the country ring before election. You're too thick with 'em. I guess you're right about me bein' too keerless about the truth to take your advice an' speak the truth to one in a while from the out'set. I guess I won't have no fewer friends.'

"Told your cousin sue him?" asked Partsons.

"No," replied Hancock, "Jake used up a consid'able part o' his capital in buildin' a bold front open, besides internal injuries to his character. Our family don't never take that kind o' talk 'bout a neighbor."

Beans! A Municipality's Gastric Eminence!

Bostonians, Do Your Duty!

Every now and then, the modest, frugal and filling baked bean comes to the front en casseroled, so to speak, in a thick solemnity most flattering to Boston. It is flattering when denizens of the outside world join in venerating Boston's sacred traditions. When said denizens impart to sentiment a tincture of material regard, and cry out to Boston as a municipality for the happiness of being allowed to come within the charmed circle, it is the time for every loyal Bostonian to harken with patriotism and civic pride.

Public attention is called to a letter just received by Mayor Hibbard from a good woman of Batavia, N. Y., which His Honor has issued to the press for exploitation. The name of the writer may be had upon application to the City Hall. She seeks initiation into the delights of the bean as baked and served in Boston.

"As I am not acquainted in Boston," writes this distressed housekeeper, "and don't seem able to find the right thing in your Boston cookbooks, I wonder if I might trouble you to furnish me (or hand this letter to some dear lady who would) a recipe for genuine Boston baked beans, also Boston brown bread.

In her discernment of good things the Batavian housekeeper compliments herself and does honor to the city. There is firm decision in the very directness and simplicity of her request. She knows what she wants, and she wants the best.

Did she, in looking about for an appetizing viand, one which mingled economy and toothsome daintiness, write to Mayor Reyburn of Philadelphia and ask him how to cook the far-famed scrapple, or for a recipe for serving the catfish and waffles so dear to the hearts of Philadelphians?

NO. She turned her face to the East, where wisdom is, and asked for beans.

Did she importune Mayor Mahool of Baltimore for his formula for yellow-legged pullets a la Maryland?

NOT MUCH. She appealed to Hibbard of Boston for the official dope-sheet on brown bread.

Never a thought for steamed oysters and terrapin stew, the two civilizing mediums of Washington.

No request of Mayor Busse in Chicago for a prescription for hasenpfeffer. The celebrated shmierkase gardens, a notable and commendable institution in St. Louis, where Mayor Wells presides, are ignored.

Detroit—French Canadian Detroit—with its Christmas feast of muskrat baked in a hole in the ground, was no more to be considered than New York with its lobsters and other chafing dish atrocities.

Beans and Brown Bread unanimously! It's the one best bet. The Boston entry leads at the post, quarter, half, stretch and finish.

It is the duty of every housewife in the city who thinks she has the best recipe for beans and brown bread to send it at once to Batavia.

In the letter to Mayor Hibbard the writer expresses a willingness to pay any one who will supply the coveted secret. But no money should be accepted for such a service.

It should be done for the glory and fair name of Boston.

How to Be an Insanity Expert

By James J. Montague

If you earn any less than a thousand a week, you are falling behind the procession;

You may easily gain the success that you seek by learning a modern profession.

Insanity experts are much in demand; they revel in affluent ease;

They are widely respected, and always command astoundingly liberal fees.

They need only pose as the professional name of the malady any one has,

Be he dippy or batty, or dotty or balty, or merely upon the pazzaz.

It is easy to know, when you glance at a row of persons afflicted in mind,

By the look in their eyes and their varied replies, the "nuts" from the dangerous kind.

If you knock with a rock on a lunatic's block and it makes a dull thud, it will follow

That it will never do harm; but there's ground for alarm if the sound is unpleasantly hollow.

And in unsettled mind of the criminal kind is amazingly easy to tell; to Hand the patient a knife, if he threatens your life he had better be clapped in a cell.

WHEN you're called to the stand in a criminal trial you must always look blandly blasé,

Using nine-pointed words in your lofty denial of what other experts may say.

Be brief and exact in your statements of fact; bid reason hot-tempered defiance,

And announce at the start that you only impart the recognized dicta of science.

If you closely adhere to these rules, in a year you will have reputation and pelf,

And no one will know it you possibly grow just a little bit buzzy yourself.

Women Revise the Tariff

By Wex Jones

CHAMP CLARK was not present last night at the meeting of the S. M. & S. A., called to discuss his statement that $5 was enough for any woman to pay for a hat. It was the unanimous opinion of the meeting that with women in Congress such a ludicrous misstatement would be impossible, and a prominent member of the Suffragettes Militant and Scrapping Association snifted that it was no wonder such an ignorant man was the minority leader.

The S. M. & S. A. then took up the question of the tariff on hats. It was hard by the simple that revenue should be derived from taxing luxuries, and that the necessities of life should be admitted free. Hats being a necessity, and furs and hats an especially necessity, it was obvious that the duty upon them should be removed entirely. This being the sense of the meeting, a suffragette committee was appointed to draw up a schedule of necessities which should be admitted free of duty. The list, in part:

|---|---|
| Hats. | Clothes. |
| Candy. | Hats. |
| Cats to kill mice. | Ice Cream. |
| Clothes. | Hats. |
| Ribbons. | Articles of dress. |
| Hats. | Clothes. |
| Diamonds. | Laces. |

The reading of this schedule was loudly applauded, and the same committee was empowered to draw up a list of luxuries upon which heavy duties should be placed by the new tariff law. After deliberating three minutes the committee submitted the following schedule:

| | |
|---|---|
| Cigars. | Whiskey. |
| Trousers. | Cigarettes. |
| Business necessities. | Tobacco. |
| Beer. | Pipes. |
| Steel. | Derby hats. |
| Roast Beef. | Cocktails. |
| Bricks. | Bread. |

The list was adopted without a dissenting voice, and then a leading member of the S. M. & S. A. made a short speech, in which she showed that women cared more for principle than men do. On a question the speaker amended the sentence to read that women cared more for principle than men do. In proof she cited the Munich woman who fainted under the weight of the enormous hat she was wearing. "Is there a man," added the speaker "who, if he felt his hat making him faint, wouldn't remove his hat?" [Cries of "Not one!" and "Quitters!]

The meeting then adjourned.

Washington—Champ Clark has sailed for the North Pole.

A New Singer of Song

The Greeting of a Poetess of Established Fame to a Newcomer Among the Bards

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1908, by American-Journal-Examiner

"AUTUMN SPENTO" ("with tapers quenched") is the title of a slender little booklet of verse which came to me from Venice, Italy, the other day. This is the dedication:

"This book is dedicated to such as love the same beauty that I love, somewhat after my own fashion; and in Memoriam of William Brooke Smith, Painter and Dreamer of Dreams."

The name of the poet is "Ezra Pound," and when I realize that this poet is grown to the age of manhood it makes my own youth seem far and far away, for somewhere among my souvenirs of a Springtime of life there is a little tintype picture of several youths and maidens, and the father of this poet is among the number; and so am I.

And then I stop and remember that my own wee son, who tarried so short a time on earth, would be also man-grown were he here; and he, too, might be writing verses even as the son of my friend of long ago.

And so, with more than the interest of an older writer in a young singer, I give these strange, and weird, and new songlets a setting here, that "those who love what he loves after his own fashion" may read.

Here is one:

For man is a skin full of wine
But his soul is a hole full of God
And the song of all time blows thru him
As winds thru a knot-holed board.
The man be a skin full of wine
Yet his heart is a little child
That croucheth low beneath the wind
When the God-storm battereth wild.

Once when I was among the young men...
And they said I was quite strong among the young men.
Once there was a woman....
....but I forget.... she was....
....I hope she will not come again.

....I do not remember....
I think she hurt me once but....
That was very long ago.

I do not like to remember things any more.

I like one little band of winds that blow
In the ash trees here;
For we are quite alone
Here 'mid the ash trees.

And I? I have put aside all folly and all grief,
I wrapped my tears in an elum leaf
And left them under a stone
And now men call me mad because I have thrown
All folly from me, putting it aside
To leave the old barren ways of men,
Because my bride
Is a pool of the wood and
The all men say that I am mad
It is only that I am glad,
Very glad, for my bride hath toward me a great love
That is sweeter than the love of women
That plagues and burn and drive one away.

And here is a

BALLAD FOR GLOOM

For God, our God, is a gallant foe,
That playeth behind the veil.
I have loved my God as a child at best,
I have loved my God as maid to man.
But lo, this thing is best:
To love your God as a gallant foe
That plays behind the veil
To meet your God as the night winds rise
Beyond Aretusa's pave.

I have played with God for a woman,
I have sulked with my God for truth,
I have lost to my God as a man, clear eyed,
His dice lie not of ruth.
For I am made as a naked blade,
But bear to this thing in sooth
Who loseth to God as man to man
Shall win at the turn of the game.
I have drawn my blade where the high rings meet,
But the ending is the same;
Who loseth to God as the sword blade loses
Shall win at the end of the game.
For God, our God, is a gallant foe,
That playeth behind the veil
Whom God deigns not to overthrow
Hath need of triple mail.

And one more:

THRENOS

No more for us the little sighing
No more the winds at twilight trouble
Lo, the fair dead!
No more do I burn.
No more for us the fluttering of wings
That whirred the air above us.
Lo, the fair dead!
No more desire dayeth me,
No more for us the trembling
At the meeting of hands.
Lo, the fair dead!
No more for us the wine of the lips
No more for us the knowledge.
Lo, the fair dead!
No more the torrent
No more for us the meeting place
(Lo, the fair dead!)
Tintaged.

Success to you, young singer in Venice
Success to "With Tapers Quenched."
